SUMMARY

Why is it so hard to hire and keep people, and what can we do about it?

People, including recruiters, HR executives, and hiring managers, will tell you that they know the right kind of person for a given job, but what we think is right often isn't actually the best choice. When you have a better way to identify the right characteristics and behaviors for a position, you will end up with employees that are a better fit.

And if we can identify and understand how we behave and how other people behave as early as the recruitment process, we can build stronger teams and organizations from the start, with less impact on the budget.
